JACK TARS SNUBBED.

No Entertainment Provided for Sailors of the Visiting Ship.

Officers Feted and Dined, but the Seamen Must Shift for Themselves.

American Sailors Indignant at the Slight to Their Sea Brothers.

Although the superior officers of the foreign warships in port have been wined and dined and fêted generally since their arrival here, nothing whatever seems to have been done for the entertainment of the petty officers, sailors and marines on these vessels.

They have simply been neglected entirely, and even after the long and tedious land parade on Friday, when they were under marching orders from 8 o'clock in the morning until late in the afternoon, when they got back to their ships worn out with a hard day's work not a morsel of refreshment was provided for them.

After the review at the City Hall they were escorted down to the Battery and hustled aboard the steamboats which transferred them to the fleet, while the senior officers were taken up to the Waldorf in coaches and treated to the best that fashionable hospitality could afford.

This lack of hospitality shown towards the foreign tars, both here and during the stay of the fleet at Hampton Roads, is a subject of later mortification to the American sailors, and it is the chief topic of conversation in the fleet to-day, and although the foreigners do not say much they do a good deal of thinking, while Uncle Sam's boys are indignant and speak their minds very freely on the subject.

They say that when they have visited foreign ports they have always been given a cordial welcome by the people. Not long ago the British crew was royally entertained at Stockholm, the freedom of the city was presented to them. At Rouen, France, the sailors of the Enterprise were made much of, and fêtes were given in honor of the tars of the Newark and Bennington in celebration in that country not three months ago.

Again, when the great review of the English warships occurred at Southampton, some time ago, the crews of the United States vessels were the recipients of distinguished honors, and everything was done by their British hosts to make them comfortable and happy, and they can look back upon all this with none but the pleasantest recollections.

They feel that for the good reputation of their country the foreign sailors should have received at least some attention, and that it is their duty to see that the lack of common courtesy shown to Uncle Sam's parsons in failing to provide sufficient means for the entertainment of his guests, or to simple negligence on the part of those officials who have had the arrangements for the reception of the foreign fleet in charge.

Even the officers of the White Squadron feel a sense of shame and indignation at the way in which the foreign tars have been treated, and declare that something ought to have been done to return for the courtesies shown on the part of the foreign tars.

While the fleet was at Hampton Roads the foreigners were most obliging and courteous to visitors, who swarmed about their ships, and the sailors and officers were untiring in their efforts to please the thousands of guests. In showing them around every part of their vessels.

In fact, it was all work and no play with them, and it has been the same thing ever since they have made a voyage to New York, and it is the duty of the foreign tars to show them the same courtesy.

The visiting warships have been a great attraction for the public, and they are overrun with excursionists every day.

They made a splendid showing at the review, and several days were spent in preparing the decorations for that occasion, and in putting their vessels in shipshape order with paint and scrubbing brushes. All this involved no end of hard work, and it was all done for the benefit of the hundreds of thousands of Americans who witnessed with delight the grand demonstration.

Yet for all this trouble the foreign tars have hardly received a word of thanks, and in fact they have been snubbed and slighted.

Now it is reported that the White Squadron is to be ordered away from New York, and that they are going to leave the foreigners behind to go when they choose.

In most of the vessels the arrangements to stay in port for some time, thus looking very much like a crown and a discount to the officers and crew, and it is soon to break up is true, and that some of the vessels will leave in a few days. He refused to discuss the matter, however, saying that he has just received from Washington.

According to one of the officers of the fleet, the White Squadron is to be ordered away from New York, and that the fleet will be disbanded in the latter part of the month.

Of the fleet which was appropriated by Congress to the entertainment of the foreign fleet, only $25,000 was set apart for the entertainment of the crew and officers of the foreign vessels. Now it is reported that this money has now been spent, and that the fleet will be disbanded in the latter part of the month.

At Hampton Roads two or three officers were given to the officers of the foreign fleet on board the Palmetto.

HER SECRET KNOWN.

Lena Dahlmier Dead from Malpractice on Staten Island.

Her Ante-Mortem Statement Implicates Butcher Busch.

She Was a New York Dressmaker--The Doctor Arrested.

The identity of the young woman who was taken to Smith's infirmary on Staten Island Saturday, suffering from malpractice, was disclosed soon after her death there this morning by her sister, Mrs. Louisa Hartung, of 158 Broad street, Stapleton.

She was Miss Lena Dahlmier, and was taken to the infirmary from her sister's house.

Her ante-mortem statement, in which she gave the name of a doctor, who, she said, had performed the operation, as well as the name of her betrayer, was taken last night by coroner Schafer.

Miss Dahlmier died at 2:30 o'clock this morning.

The infirmary she accused in her statement to the coroner is Dr. Charles A. Fisher, of 240 West one Hundred and Twenty-sixth street.

He was arrested at his home at 5 o'clock this morning by Detective Sauter. He was taken to the infirmary and placed in the Jefferson Market prison.

Later in the day he was arraigned in the Jefferson Market court, and the warrant upon which he was arrested was issued by Justice Hogan. Then the prisoner was taken to the infirmary and placed in a cell.

Other officers from Richmond County are in the city, looking for a handsome young butcher named George Busch, whom Miss Dahlmier says caused the operation to be performed.

Busch is supposed to be in business on Greenwich street, but the officers have not yet been able to locate him.

Mrs. Hartung told an "Evening World" reporter this morning that her sister, Lena, had been employed as a dressmaker in an establishment on Third street. She did not know the number of the place.

"Lena lived here with me until last June," said Mrs. Hartung, "when she left me to go to the infirmary. She had been employed a week ago she returned to my home and said that she had come back to live with me, and that she had been employed as a dressmaker. I discovered that something was wrong, and when she grew very ill, I sent her to the infirmary. She had been employed as a dressmaker in an establishment on Third street. She did not know the number of the place."

According to Mr. Depew, the Governor's physician, when the infirmary was authorized guests upon such a limited appropriation is ridiculous, and is bound to prove disastrous. Foreign nations will regard such parsimoniousness with contempt, and it will do us no good abroad.

CORNELL LOCKED IN.

He Is Awaiting Arrest for Rebecca Berghold's Death.

Will Only Talk Through a Third Person Now.

There is much speculation as to what will happen when Police Captain Berghold, of the Grand Central sub-station, who is now on his way from Chicago with the body of his daughter Rebecca, meets Lawyer William Alexander Cornell, who admits that he is the man who went to Chicago with the Captain's daughter, and lived at the Southern Hotel there with her as his wife, under the name of Alexander.

Capt. Berghold is due here at 7 P. M. He believes that his daughter Rebecca was murdered. She drew $1,000 from a bank before she left New York, and when she was found dead in her room at the Southern Hotel, with her throat cut, a bloody razor in her hand, but little of this money was left, and some of her jewelry was also missing.

Correll has himself locked in his room this morning, and would only talk through a third person.

He refused to be seen, he permitted a Mr. Noble to talk for him, and according to Mr. Noble expressed surprise that he had not been arrested. He said that he did not expect to be arrested, and that he would be placed on trial and talked through a third person. He said that he would not be a competent witness in case he alters his story according to future circumstances.

He said he did not know how much money Miss Berghold had with her, but he knew it was a large sum, and that she had spent but little of it.

He said he had received none of it. He had not seen the body of Rebecca, and he had not seen the razor. He said that he had secured a razor, although he expressed his belief that she had committed suicide.

He said he would be placed on trial and talked through a third person. He said that he would not be a competent witness in case he alters his story according to future circumstances.

When asked, through Mr. Noble, to say whether he expected Cornell to carry out his threat of vengeance, Mr. Correll would not answer.

He said that both he and Capt. Berghold are capital shots, and the result of a meeting would probably prove fatal to one of them.

Feeling among Miss Berghold's friends has reached fever pitch, and nothing but continued vigilance on the part of the police can prevent a tragedy. The friends of the girl are determined to see that justice is done, and they are determined to see that the man who is accused of the murder is brought to trial.

Correll indignantly denied the implication that he is a coward. He said that he had never received a cent from Capt. Berghold. At the latter's house no one could be seen to make any effort to keep his presence there a secret.

Inspector McLaughlin said this morning that any information warranting the arrest of Cornell would come from a reliable source, as yet no word had been received.

At the inquest in Chicago yesterday Capt. Berghold testified that he believed Cornell had murdered his daughter, and not only robbed her of her good name, but of her life. He expressed a determination to run Cornell down at any cost.

He has eaten at my table a countless number of times," said the Captain, "and I have treated him like a son. He would not have been convicted of a crime, and he would not have been convicted of a crime. This man murdered her."

Correll has been an intimate friend of the girl's brother, W. M. Berghold. They had been closely associated since their college days, and he had been a frequent visitor at the family home. He had been a frequent visitor at the family home, and he had been a frequent visitor at the family home.

The Captain said that a short time ago he had been to Chicago, and he had been to Chicago, and he had been to Chicago. He had been to Chicago, and he had been to Chicago, and he had been to Chicago.

He had been to Chicago, and he had been to Chicago, and he had been to Chicago. He had been to Chicago, and he had been to Chicago, and he had been to Chicago.

UNCLE SAM--Welcome on shore, gentlemen. Don't hesitate to buy anything you can pay for."

MANIC HELD THE FLAT.

Veteran West Terrorized the Inmates for a Week.

Kept from Starving by Food Thrown in the Windows.

Andrew West, a veteran of the late war, and member of the Gen. Dix Post, G. A. R., stood at the bar of the Yorkville Court this morning, a mild-eyed madman.

West was arrested at 4:30 this morning by Court Officer Heller, on a warrant sworn out by John W. West, his aged father.

Andrew had long been ill, and on Tuesday last he became a raving maniac.

He lived with his father and mother at 25 West Forty-fifth street, a flat-house. He drove his parents out, and took possession of two rooms in the second floor.

Andrew then instituted a reign of terror in the flat, which he kept up for a week.

At all hours of the day and night he would pass by the door and throw food in the windows, filling the room with smoke, and often kindling fires on the top of the stove.

The other tenants complained to the landlord, Matthew O'Neil, who kept a guard at the door of West's room, and would not let anyone in or out.
